8 Emerging Artists Who Made a Splash at This Year's NADA and Untitled Art in Miami

Every attentive art collector's acquisition list should include these fast-rising talents, including Camila Falquez, Laura Footes, and Hugh Byrne

Two of the first art fairs to open in Miami and Miami Beach this year were NADA Miami, which returned to the legendary Ice Palace Studios with more than 150 exhibitors from 50 cities presenting new voices in contemporary art, and Untitled Art, which came back to its sprawling tent on the beach with over 160 exhibitors from 38 countries offering work by younger artists alongside older practitioners, who provided a context for the changing trends.

Surveying hundreds of artworks in a variety of media at both of these fashionable fairs, Galerie has selected eight outstanding emerging artists who should be on every attentive art collector's acquisition list.

1. Laura Footes at SHRINE

A British artist who earned a degree from the Royal Drawing School in London in 2014, Laura Footes spent time studying in New York that same year on an academic exchange with the Art Students League, yet her work was only exhibited on this side of the pond in an October solo show at SHRINE. Recently commissioned by His Majesty King Charles III to create a series of "Margate Sunrises" in honor of the Coronation and to be auctioned at Christie's in support of His Majesty's charities, the talented young artist paints ghostly figures transcendentally flowing through time in dreamlike urban and domestic settings. A member of Tracey Emin's TKE Studios program, Footes has been dealing with a chronic illness since childhood, which makes the out-of-body experiences of the subjects of her Dinner Time painting at NADA all the more unnerving to see.
